Process

Advantages include:

- In the summer before each new fiscal year, a circular letter is sent out requesting the submission of open requisitions for the Federal Register and Code of Federal Regulations.
- Open requisitions for each new fiscal year are submitted using the Standard Form 1 (SF1) to:
Official Journals of Government (OJG)
Room A-842

ojg@gpo.gov
- On a quarterly basis, a circular letter is sent out for requisitions to obtain printed rider copies of the Code of Federal Regulations. Send your SF1 submission to the same address as listed above.

Billing

GPO is required by law to publish Federal Register notices and the Code of Federal Regulations.¹ Also, by law, agencies are required to reimburse GPO for the services performed.²

1 Chapter 15, Title 44, United States Code (see specifically sections 1502, 1504 and 1510).

2 44 U.S.C. §1509

Reimbursements for such costs and expenses shall be made by the Federal agencies and credited, together with all receipts, as provided in section 309(b).

Content

The Federal Register is charged at a per column rate (published columns) depending on the type of article submission to our office. Current rates for submission types are as follows:

- Word document - $159/column
- Camera copy - $174/column
- Manuscript copy - $174/column

The Code of Federal Regulations is charged at a per page rate. The current rate for the submission type is $85/per page.

Billing Address Code (BAC)

This is your GPO customer account number. It is a six-digit alpha-numeric field assigned by GPO based on your agency's program or accounting needs. It also includes your agency address, point of contact, and agency location code, when collection is made through Treasury's IPAC system or deposit account designation. A BAC can be created for a specific agency program or sub-program that enables you to easily assign printing costs to your agency's activities.

We use the BAC located at the end of each article published in the Federal Register for billing purposes.

- When a document contains an improper BAC it leads to unnecessary "charge backs" and improper billings.
- When a BAC is not included in the article additional administrative hours for proper billing are required and may lead to additional charges to the submitting agency.

Agency Liaison

Your agency liaison is responsible in representing their agency in all matters relating to submission of documents to the Office of the Federal Register for publishing within the Federal Register. He/she must also ensure that not only does each article contain a BAC, but that the correct agency BAC is identified for each document submission to the Office of the Federal Register.

To identify your agency liaison, contact the Office of the Federal Register at fedreg.info@nara.gov.
